

Support Services Beyond the Office of Students with Disabilities

College campuses offer so much more than just academics—they're filled with support services designed to help you succeed and enjoy your college experience. Exploring these offices can help you feel more connected, prepared, and empowered throughout your college journey.

Academic Advising Center – When you're unsure about what classes to take or want to stay on track to graduate, advisors can help you build a plan.

Career Services – If you're thinking about internships, career planning, or how to build a résumé, this is the place to start.

Counseling Center - When you face problems that get in the way of your happiness or success.

Health Center - When you have a health problem, know where to go. A sick student may become a failing student.

Tutorial Centers - Another resource for academic help.

Student Employment Office - If you are looking for a part-time job, here is the place to go.

Professor's Office - Most professors have office hours to assist students. Find out where the office is and what hours a professor is available.

Financial Aid Office - Go there for financial advice.

Student Union Building - In this building you will find many of the above offices and information on clubs, entertainment, sporting events and more.

College Directory - Every college publishes a list of their services and their location. Let it be your guide.
